The Frisch Centre invites applications for research positions from candidates who work in applied economics and econometrics. Applicants must have a Ph.D. in economics or a related field. We are seeking highly qualified candidates who are committed to a career in research, and who are capable of publishing in well recognized international journals.

The Ragnar Frisch Centre for Economic Research is an independent research institution founded by the University of Oslo, Norway, and located at campus. The Frisch Centre conducts applied economic research in cooperation with the Department of Economics and other units at the University of Oslo; see www.frisch.uio.no/main_eng.html. The project portfolio concentrates on education, labor market, social insurance, health, pensions, energy, environment and public economics. Projects are commissioned by the Norwegian Research Council, international organizations and public bodies, and are typically of both theoretical and empirical nature.

The pay structure at the Centre rewards publications and project administration. Fixed pay currently ranges from NOK 403 700 to 667 592 about 63 000 to 104 000 US$. On top of that are bonuses for publications in top-ranked journals. Norway can offer very good working conditions and first-rate research communities, along with highly developed infrastructure and favorable career opportunities.

Persons from the EU Member States have similar rights as Norwegian nationals regarding employment, remuneration and other conditions of work. Norway has a Gender Equality Act stipulating equal opportunities for women and men and has invested a lot in providing beneficial conditions for families with small children.
